

What's Developing

It's a ways into the future, but it may be a conference date you want to jot down on your calendar if you either are in business or are considering starting a business.

The conference is called MarketPlace. It has been held the past two years in Huron and the next one will be in Aberdeen at Northern State University on March 26.

The conference committee states that those who will benefit from attending are business owners and entrepreneurs interested in starting or expanding their business, economic development professionals and elected officials interested in organically expanding their business community, and students interested in creating businesses that operate here and abroad.

There will be speakers on a variety of subjects, exhibits of South Dakota products, and information about South Dakota good and services.

Those interested in being a presenter or exhibitor can apply by going to www.marketplacesd.com. This would be a great opportunity for Eureka businesses to get exposure and let the rest of the state know what they have to offer. Participants can also sign up at that website.

Wanda Jundt